

History of Tar Heel Libraries and Librarianship as Found in North Carolina Libraries and North Carolina Library Bulletin: A Bibliography*

compiled by Robert G. Anthony, Jr.,

*For the purposes of this bibliography, library history is defined quite broadly, and many of the articles cited here were not designed as historical pieces when written. Some were intended to be up-to-date descriptions of recently constructed or renovated buildings; others emphasize the operations or unique programs of individual libraries. A "non-history" article may be included because it represents a significant contemporary description of a particular library. As such, it offers today's reader the opportunity to understand better how things were in a library or libraries of the past. Some articles cited are quite short, but it was felt they should be included since they often contain early or unique information on a library or librarian.

The entries were selected from the first 49 volumes of North Carolina Libraries (1942-1991) and from the 9 volumes of North Carolina Library Bulletin (1909-1932). The latter periodical—the first significant effort to distribute throughout the state on a regular basis library news and articles of professional interest—was published by the North Carolina Library Commission and sent to Tar Heel librarians, school superintendents, and other citizens interested in library development. In purpose, content, and audience, North Carolina Library Bulletin was very similar to North Carolina Libraries, which would emerge in 1942, ending a ten-year period in which North Carolina lacked a library journal.

To conserve space in the bibliography, North Carolina Libraries has been abbreviated as NCL and North Carolina Library Bulletin as NCLBULLETIN.
