Along Freedom Road

Hyde County, North Carolina, and the Fate of Black Schools in the South

by David S. Cecelski

The moving story of a rural black community's fight to save its two schools. The 1968-69 school boycott in Hyde County, N.C., was one of the most sustained and successful protests of the civil rights movement. As the first book about the desegregation of rural schools, Along Freedom Road offers important insights about the dismantling of African-American education, its meaning within the community, and issues of cultural survival.
