AN ELEMENTARY SCHOOL LIBRARY — The cover photo shows an architect's sketch of the Frederick Archer Elementary School in Greensboro. The library quarters open into a central court, bounded on its other sides by classroom units. The reading room has ample space for such activities as storytelling, browsing, independent study, reference work, and circulation. Architect was Loewenstein-Atkinson and Woodroof of Greensboro. This sketch appeared in the February, 1964 issue of ALA BULLETIN and appears in this issue with the permission of ALA.
